Manfred Frank (born March 22, 1945) is a German philosopher, professor of philosophy at the University of Tübingen and permanent visiting professor at the University of Bielefeld. His work focuses on German idealism, romanticism and the concepts of subjectivity and self-consciousness. His 950-page study of German romanticism, Unendliche Annäherung, has been described as "the most comprehensive and thoroughgoing study of early German romanticism" and "surely one of the most important books from the post-War period on the history of German philosophy." He has also written at length on analytic philosophy and recent French philosophy.
